IT'S 2030, AND THE DECOLONISED ARTS FESTIVAL IS NOW 10 YEARS OLD!

Remember when our galleries, museums and theatres were overwhelmingly full of Eurocentric art and culture?

Back in 2016, the narrow-minded and backward-looking funding policies of the time had held the arts in an elitist, white-dominated cultural stranglehold. Today, the Decolonised Arts Festival celebrates just how far we've come since then.

So, on Sunday 24 November - International Decolonisation Day - it's time to set up your art piece, build a stage, or jump on one someone else has built. Artists are gathering in the CBD and harbour foreshore. Lantern boats are now floating at Circular Quay, a drumming pod is on the arch of the Harbour Bridge and sand mandalas have been set up in Hyde Park.

Time to join in! Don't forget to use spaces in the decolonised heritage institutions: Sydney Opera House, Art Gallery of New South Wales, Australian Museum and State Theatre.

Children's arts and childcare activities will be located near most language clusters. Bring the kids, roster yourself on and don't forget to dress up.
